Marriott Center to lock again

By MATTHEW MacLEAN
Universe Staff Writer

Concerts at the Marriott Center may not be as common as they once were, but rumors that the center is moving out of the concert business are false, said administrators.

Until about 1989, BYU routinely made the Marriott Center available for use by concert promoters, featuring major performers and the entertainment of students and the surrounding community. Such major concert was held almost every semester, and some events even more frequently, said Marriott Center Director Larry Duffin.

Today's students may be surprised to know of the major groups that have come to BYU in the past. Groups that appeared at BYU include Journey (1983), Chicago (1984), Tears for Fears (1985), James Taylor and INXS (1986), Boston, UB40 and Billy Joel (1987), and the B-52's (1990). Duffin said U2's concert was scheduled to perform at the Marriott Center but at the last minute cancelled or changed their tour routes. Howard Jones almost performed at SaltAir instead.

Two years ago, U2 requested the use of Cougar Stadium for a concert on their Zoo-TV tour.

Duffin said U2's concert was overwhelming in size, with white uplinks and an armada of equipment. It would have required new sod to replace the stadium grass which would be flattened by the stage.

BYU was ready to go ahead with it, and went through six months of meetings planning out the details, Duffin said. But in the end, U2 changed their tour route to Las Vegas instead.

Duffin took over the Marriott Center's operations in 1990, and said that since that time BYU had difficulty in securing performers. The recent concert by Fogelberg marked the first performance of a major performer at the Marriott Center in some time.

Duffin said students have become much more tolerant of guest performers in the last few years. During the 1970s students protested for weeks about the "hypocrisy" of Neil Diamond coming to campus with a beard. Duffin said that once he decided possible concert he has to run through Student Life Vice-President, and now, for approval, but he has been turned down.

Duffin said there are no set guidelines to review potential performers, and generally there is no objective study of a group's music. The performer's reputation and past performances are into consideration, along with advice from promoters who have a touch with current music.

Duffin said there are potential liaisons.

Request for Whitewater probe encounters Democratic support

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At least four Democratic senators say special counsel should investigate President Clinton's investment in a controversial Arkansas development, dashing White House hopes of framing Republican demands for such a review as politically motivated.

Republicans complained Tuesday that the Justice Department was dragging its feet in investigating the Whitewater Development Corp. and an Arkansas savings and loan run by the Clintons' partner in Whitewater.

Eight GOP lawmakers said in a letter to Attorney General Janet Reno that the statute of limitations for any civil wrongdoing that could have occurred in Whitewater and Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan would expire as early as this March.

The eight Republicans said they had no evidence of wrongdoing, but urged Reno to seek waivers from the statute of limitations for the president, First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, her former law firm, Clinton investment partner James McDougal and several others involved with the bank.

"These agreements will allow time for a complete and independent investigation," the Republicans said in the letter. "Furthermore, it will reassure the American public that anyone implicated in any wrongdoing will answer these allegations on their merits."

Reno's office had no immediate reaction to the letter, signed by GOP

PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON

Sens. Bob Dole of Kansas, Larry Pressler of South Dakota and Alfonse D'Amato of New York, as well as Reps. Bob Michel of Illinois, James Leach of Iowa, Jan Meyers of Kansas, Hamilton Fish Jr. of New York and Bill Clinger of Pennsylvania.

The White House has agreed to turn over Clinton's Whitewater records to Justice Department investigators, but only under a subpoena that prohibits their release to the public.

The White House has steadfastly opposed demands that Reno name special counsel to investigate allegations that Clinton improperly benefited from his business partnership with McDougal.

Investigators are trying to determine whether depositors' funds were diverted from Madison to help retire Clinton's 1984 gubernatorial campaign debt, and whether thrift money was improperly deposited in the Whitewater account.

Clinton and his wife have denied any wrongdoing.

A White House damage-control strategy to label the attacks as part of a calculated Republican effort to smear Clinton has wilted as Democratic senators Charles Robb of Virginia, Bill Bradley of New Jersey, Bob Kerry of Nebraska, and Russell Feingold of Wisconsin have endorsed the Leach proposal for special counsel.

Clinton adviser George Stephanopoulos had "nothing to say" when asked about the impact of the Democratic defections.

Utah Rep. Karen Shepherd Tuesday became the first House Democrat to join Democratic senators in calling for a special prosecutor to investigate the matter.

Shepherd made the request in a letter sent to Attorney General Janet Reno, who previously balked at the idea.

"The public's concern over the president's business dealings has damaged his credibility and hampered his effectiveness," Shepherd wrote. "The attorney general has a responsibility to initiate an investigation to clear the air."

Lees counsel students: practice gratitude toward others, understanding toward self

By EMILY SELDEN
Universe Staff Writer

In traditional style, President Rex E. Lee and Sister Janet Lee encouraged students to develop and express gratitude and stressed the importance of maintaining an eternal perspective at Tuesday morning's devotional in the Marriott Center.

"Gratitude is one of the greatest human accomplishments and ingratitude one of the great human failures," President Lee said.

President Lee quoted President Ezra Taft Benson on gratitude:

"The crime of ingratitude is one of the most prevalent, and I might say at the same time, one of the greatest with which mankind is afflicted."

"Gratitude must not only be felt inwardly, but also expressed outwardly," President Lee said.

Students need to be more aware of people and opportunities around them for which they should be grateful, even if it does not come naturally or easily, he said. He used an example from the apostle Paul to link thankfulness and holiness.

Practicing gratitude will help one develop human virtues such as courtesy, civility and genuine concern for other people, he said.

Sister Lee emphasized the relationship between maintaining an eternal perspective and magnifying the light of Christ.

"Only through the light of Christ that is in us and our understanding of the gospel can we see things in perspective," she said. "Remember, it is not possible for us in this earth life to be mirror images of Christ's perfection."

Instead, she told students they must refract this light as a prism refracts sunlight, resulting in a spectrum of beautiful colors.

Sister Lee reasoned that if students let the light of Christ shine through them, they can receive his image in their countenances.

A student bearing Christ's image will know and be known by Christ, she said.

By focusing on short-term flaws, students hamper their progression and the light of Christ within them may dim, Sister Lee said.

"How often do we let one flaw, one mistake, one bad grade, one disappointment, or even many disappointments loom so large before our eyes that we fail to see circumstances as they really are?" she asked.

Orton opts to stay in House, says his work not finished

By BRADY LONG
Universe Staff Writer

Despite promising public and party support, Democratic Rep. Bill Orton announced Monday that he will stay in the 3rd District and not challenge Republican Orrin Hatch for the U.S. Senate.

"I decided I wanted to stay where I could do the people of Utah the most good ... There is a great deal left for me to do," Orton said at a press conference at the Democratic State Committee Headquarters.

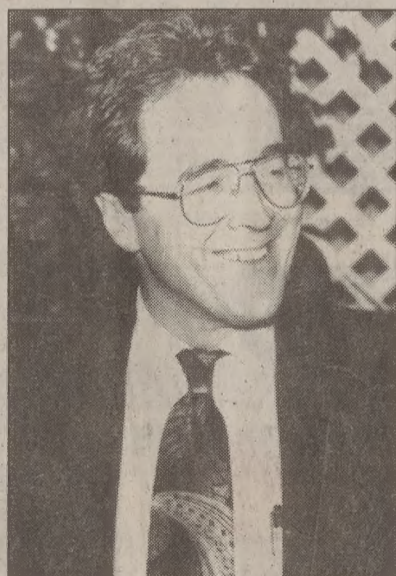

Orton's Communications Director, Jenny Wilson, said Orton decided not to run in order to concentrate on his current proposals in the Utah House of Representatives.

"There's a lot of issues he's working on ... I think he felt that he could have a continued impact for his district," Wilson said.

She said Orton plans to introduce legislation that would expand the prosecution of child abuse to a federal level. For these reasons, Orton's decision not to run is good for Utah, said Todd Taylor, Democratic State Committee executive director.

Orton's hopes to be selected for an opening seat on the House Ways and Means Committee influenced his decision, Wilson said.

Even though Orton's voting record often clashes with the Democratic majority in Congress, his credentials as the only tax attorney in Congress make him a realistic candidate for the position.

The difficulty of raising funds to survive the June 28 party primary and a subsequent standoff with Hatch, affected Orton's decision, Wilson said. "He did have a positive initial response, but many organizations would not commit until after the primary."

Orton trailed Hatch by six points in a Jan. 5 Deseret News-KSL Poll, but this did not influence his decision, Wilson said.

Clinton threatens to strike Serbs

Associated Press

BRUSSELS, Belgium — President Clinton and his NATO allies warned Serb forces Tuesday of a new determination to launch air strikes if needed to relieve embattled Muslim enclaves in Bosnia. "My resolve is there," Clinton said.

At the end of a two-day summit, the 16 Western leaders announced their willingness to order bombing raids if Bosnian Serbs continue to prevent the opening of a major airport for aid supplies or the rotation of encircled peace keepers.

"Whether they occur or not depends upon the behavior of the Bosnian Serbs from this moment forward," Clinton told reporters at the end of the meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The Serb chief of staff, Manojlo Milovanovic, warned U.N. troops would also suffer in any air campaign because his forces would stay close to peacekeepers.

Clinton and other leaders insisted there was a new mood among the allies to carry out the threats first issued last June to use their formidable air power to ease the situation in Bosnia.

"There is a very real determination" to carry out the warnings, said British Prime Minister John Major.

"I made it clear that for our part we were prepared to follow through," Clinton said.

And if the Bosnian Serbs don't get the message, he said later, after meeting with officials of the 12-nation European Union. "We'll see if our resolve is there. My resolve is there."

"We don't believe it is necessary to have air strikes to protect 150 Canadian peace keepers in Srebrenica," said Canadian Prime

"We've asked the Serbs several times to open Tuzla. They refused. Now we've decided to do it anyway."

— Alain Juppe, French foreign minister

Minister Jean Chretien said.

Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers said there was "still a margin of uncertainty" about whether an allied air campaign would be launched.

"We still need the approval for a first strike" from U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, he said.

Boutros-Ghali said that if U.N.

military, humanitarian and political officials on the scene ask for air strikes, he will immediately ask NATO to carry them out.

The NATO leaders raised the prospect of bombing raids to evacuate the Canadians from Srebrenica in eastern Bosnia and force open the airport at Tuzla, a key conduit for aid to the north.

"We've asked the Serbs several times to open Tuzla. They refused," said French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe. "Now we've decided to do it anyway."

The allies also reaffirmed their readiness to conduct air strikes "to prevent the strangulation of Sarajevo, the safe areas and other threatened areas of Bosnia-Herzegovina."

The allies seemed to move closer to military intervention in the conflict raging on their doorstep. More than 200,000 people have died since fighting broke out when Bosnian Serbs rebelled against independence from Yugoslavia nearly 21 months ago.

The allies did not draw up a timetable or a list of candidates for membership.

In their final statement, they endorsed the U.S. proposal for a "Partnership for Peace," which invites East Europeans to take part in military exercises and other limited activities.

"The offer is there," NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner said. "The door is open."

PENCILLED OUT?: The East Bay Golf Course Clubhouse may be a little emptier on Sundays if Mayor George Stewart's proposal passes. According to the plan, the golf course at 434 E. 1860 South would be closed every Sunday, it's second busiest day of the week.

Mayor's Sunday plan could cut city revenue

By LAEL PALMER
Universe Staff Writer

Many golfers are unhappy about Mayor George Stewart's proposal to close the East Bay Golf Course and the Veterans Memorial Pool on Sundays. Stewart is planning to propose a city-wide referendum in November to evaluate how the community feels about the proposal.

Stewart says the proposal is not an issue of religion, but an issue of family and community values, but some community members criticize Stewart for basing his motives on personal and religious standards.

"Sunday is the one day the golf course makes money. If you can't base closing the golf course on economic factors, then it must be based on something else. That something else, as far as I can see, is a religious factor," Provo City Councilman Jim Daley said.

Despite the apparent opposition to the proposal, Stewart said he felt the majority of the community would support the action.

"Some people don't speak up because they think there is no way it would pass. The community should have a voice," he said.

Stewart bases his assumption that the community would support his proposal on the October 1980 vote in Orem to determine whether the city should open its municipally owned and operated Recreation Center.

The response was more than 80 percent in favor of leaving the center closed on Sundays.

But by closing the East Bay Golf Course on Sunday, the second busiest day of the week, the city would lose $51,000 annually in revenue, said LeRoy Dennis, parks and recreation director.

It would put a "big crimp" in the course's move toward self-sufficiency, said Dennis.

The course would also be the country's only publicly-owned golf course to close on that day, according to Mark Passey, manager of regional affairs for the south-central region of the United States.

"I serve a 10-state region and I'm not aware of one being closed anywhere," said Passey.

Passey said even if the majority of the community felt strongly about not swimming or golfing on Sundays, it would be wrong to impose their beliefs on those who did not believe the same way.

"They can make the choice not to participate without the city having to make a decision to close the golf course," said Passey.

"We are currently in the process of researching what it will take to get this issue on the ballots," said Stewart. "No one really knows the feasibility or the legal implications of such a proposal because no one has suggested anything like it before," he said.

Humane goals cited for radiation tests

BOSTON — Forty years ago, doctors injected uranium into a dozen patients on the brink of death.

A congressional report years later called this a "repugnant" example of human experimentation. But to others, it is simply the way medical science has always worked, engaging the unfortunate ill in the search for treatments that might help later generations.

The differing viewpoints highlight the difficulty of judging the wisdom of radiation experiments conducted two generations ago.

Those who were there when the testing in 1953 began remember a simple humane mission — a cancer cure. Their work led to a cancer treatment that is still being used. And it was carried out with the permission of the patients' families.

They remember the times as being almost as thrilling as the development of penicillin a few years before.

"We had seen patients snatched from the grave because of the new antibiotics," remembered Dr. Belton Burrows of the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Boston. "The idea of coming up with a simple, practical, workable solution ... was very appealing."

WordPerfect increases profits in 1993

OREM, Utah — WordPerfect Corp. expects its 1993 sales will top $700 million, or roughly 20 percent more than the Utah-based software company reported for the previous year.

Final figures for 1993 sales won't be released until the end of this month, but the company has been using the $700 million-plus estimate in its contacts with industry analysts.

The company moved quickly this week to derail rumors — apparently sparked by its plans to trim its work force later this month — that its sales had declined.

John Lewis, executive vice president, said WordPerfect's planned reduction in force has nothing to do with current earnings, contrary to some rumors.

S&L cleanup suffers losses in Texas

DALLAS — In Texas, savings and loan failures were as plentiful as tumbleweeds, but the government's effort to recoup an estimated $200 billion in losses has hardly matched the task.

The Resolution Trust Corp. failed to issue a single subpoena in 99 of the 122 investigations of thrift officials handled by its three offices in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio from 1989 to early 1993, according to subpoena logs at the S&L cleanup agency.

Not a single RTC case against Texas S&L operators ever reached a jury. The few officials who were sued usually settled out of court for pennies on the dollar.

The recovery effort has been so poor that one of the RTC's most productive attorneys in Texas, Tom Burnside, quit in disgust last year and later told Congress his bosses "just wanted to bury the S&L mess in an unmarked grave."

Yeltsin urges cooperation for reforms

MOSCOW — On the eve of President Clinton's visit, Boris Yeltsin opened Russia's unruly new parliament Tuesday by urging lawmakers to cooperate with him and give his economic reforms "a second wind."

Three months after he sent tanks to crush the old, hard-line parliament, the Russian president warned the new lawmakers they must agree to "a complete and categorical exclusion of violence from the political life of the country."

Clinton arrives for a summit today to a Russia wracked by political struggle and bitterly divided over Yeltsin's free-market reforms and pro-Western tilt. The American president is expected to strongly endorse Yeltsin and shun his political foes, including extreme nationalist Vladimir Zhirinovsky.

Since the stunning success of extreme nationalists and Communists in December's parliamentary elections, doubts have emerged about Yeltsin's commitment to his painful "shock therapy" reforms.

"Despite the diversity of parties in parliament, there is a fundamental basis for constructive work together," Yeltsin told lawmakers Tuesday.

He urged parliament to pass laws easing the transition to a market economy.

Philly police get tough on truants

Associated Press

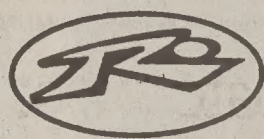

PHILADELPHIA — As soon as next month, students who skip school may find themselves in handcuffs.

Under a plan presented Monday to the Philadelphia School Board, police would patrol hangouts for young people between 10 a.m. and 2:45 p.m. Truants would be arrested, handcuffed and taken to one of at least four new truancy centers.

"We're hoping to take away those opportunities for young people who think they can cut school all day and get away with it," said John J. McLees, a city police inspector and executive director of school safety.

McLees said it is standard police procedure to use handcuffs when transporting anyone in custody.

Orem approves new hospital

By JENNIFER NIELSON
Universe Staff Writer

The Orem City Council voted Tuesday to pay for certain improvements necessary for the construction of a proposed full-service hospital at the intersection of 800 North and 800 West.

The council also resolved to prohibit the city from appropriating funds from future years' budgets.

Among the improvements requested by Nashville-based Heath Trust Inc. (HTI), owners of Payson's Mountain View Hospital, are a signalized intersection at 800 North and 800 West, an extension of 800 West, and necessary on-site utilities.

"We feel it extremely important to have a signalized intersection at 800 North and 800 West," said HTI's Hugh Johnson, Director of Occupational Health at Mountain View Hospital. That intersection falls under the jurisdiction of the State Department of Transportation (UDOT), giving Orem City no authority to determine whether or not it should be signalized.

The council voted 6-1 in favor of financing off-site utilities and extending 800 West on the condition that HTI pay for half the cost of the road extension and the other half be reimbursed to the city by future developers along that road.

Several area residents attended the meeting to oppose immediate extension of 800 West, saying the hospital could function without such an extension. They cite concerns about traffic increases on 800 West and near Orem Junior High School.

Councilman Steve Heinz cast the single opposing vote, arguing that he is not convinced of the need for another major hospital in Utah Valley. Johnson proposed that another hospital would provide more competition in the health care industry, bringing health care costs down.

Although some members of the council debated the need to provide funding, the decision was made in an effort to be fair by providing services traditionally paid for by the city, according to newly elected councilman Tim Christensen.

"Orem has a limited amount of space now. We don't need to go out and entice people with big bucks," said councilman Kelvin Clayton, who ultimately voted to make the improvements on the condition that HTI share the cost of extending 800 West while the other half be paid back by future developers.

A TRADITION FOR ALMOST HALF A CENTURY

HEBER CITY: Heber City authorities believe that the pilot light of this heater triggered a "flash" in the city's sewer system. They are trying to determine the source of the gasoline in the system.

Heber City officials close in on source of gasoline in sewers

By ANGELA HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Officials were still searching Tuesday afternoon to find the source of the gasoline released from Heber City's sewer system last night.

Tuesday afternoon, they had it traced down to one little area," Heber City Police Chief, Jim Matthews said.

In the six-by-eight block area of gasoline and alerted officials to the presence of the dangerous gas, said Darren Shepherd, manager for Mountain Fuel. Five homes were evacuated from 5 p.m. until 9 p.m.

A pilot light on a water heater in the neighborhood triggered a flash in the sewer, causing the vapors to ignite, and blowing a couple of covers into the air, Matthews said.

Officials are unsure of the source of the gasoline, although it could simply be the result of someone dumping a petroleum product down their sewer, Matthews said.

Mountain Fuel turned off the natural gas to the 40 homes jeopardized by the gasoline vapors Monday evening.

Although there was not a natural gas leak, neither pilot lights from water heaters and furnaces were shut off to prevent them from igniting gasoline

Gasoline fumes are heavier than air and stay close to the ground where pilot lights are located, Shepherd said.

Contrary to the belief of some residents, the substance in the sewer was either a solvent or gasoline, and not natural gas, said Lance Higgs, public works director for Heber City.

After Heber City officials found that the gasoline in the sewers was dissipating, they flushed them with water in an attempt to dilute it, Matthews said.

The dissipation simply indicated that gas was not continuing to be leaked into the sewer, he said.

Mountain Fuel representatives then went into each of the affected households and turned pilot lights back on.

This procedure took approximately four hours because Mountain Fuel checked each house individually to make sure that no readings of flammable materials were present, Shepherd said.

Everyone that had been evacuated had their water heaters and furnaces turned on by midnight, he said.

Nelson Ames, hazardous waste expert from the Utah State Highway Patrol, was called in to help identify the cause of the incident.

Officials say they have been able to narrow their estimate of where the gasoline is coming from because there are still traces of petroleum confined to a small area.

Rock Canyon debate ends; Provo buys land for park

By LAEL PALMER
Universe Staff Writer

Outdoor enthusiasts in Provo won't have to conquer condos to access trails at the mouth of Rock Canyon.

The Provo City Council voted Tuesday night to purchase approximately 3.6 acres of land for a trail head park to end the controversy over development in the canyon area.

The Provo City Council voted unanimously to appropriate $400,000 to purchase the property and create Rock Canyon Wilderness Park subject to acceptance of the park contract.

The area is classified by the Forest Service as a non-motorized semi-wilderness area, Stewart said, but the land had been zoned by the city's planning commission for the construction of a 13-unit condominium project east of 1450 East on 2300 North.

A group called The Rock Canyon Preservation Alliance, headed by seven community members and representing nearly 800 residents discouraged the city council from purchasing the land for residential and commercial use, according to BYU instructor Francine Bennion, a member of the alliance.

"We felt the environmental impact statements first issued were incorrect and missing a lot of information," said Bennion. "The canyon is a magnificent place that will be ruined by the alteration of the terrain."

A six-month moratorium was imposed on the development project by the Provo City Council because of local opposition to any development at the mouth of the canyon. After further study and bidding, the council decided to purchase the land for $400,000 and build a trail head park.

A private individual donated $50,000 towards the purchase of the land, alleviating some of the cost burden from Provo City, Stewart said.

With the cooperation of the Uinta National Forest Service, the park would limit access to the canyon, said Stewart.

Freddie's hopes to be new food king

By TIFFANY ZWEIFEL
Universe Staff Writer

Instead of flocking to the local Food King, students may end up doing their grocery shopping at Freddie's.

The discount store based in Bend, Ore., announced the company will spend $100 million to expand to 12 Utah stores and build two more to include full-grocery services.

Freddie's had the opportunity to see the local stores and they are nothing like what they (Utah consumers) have in this valley," said Rayona Butterfield, store director of the Fred Meyer in American Fork, the closest store to BYU. "I think customers will be thrilled when they see what Freddie's really is."

Modeling is scheduled for the Salt Lake City area, and the North Ogden and Logan areas. Remodeling is estimated to cost $50 million. The new stores are budgeted at $40 million. Sites for the new stores are being negotiated.

Utah expansion is part of Fred Meyer's five-year plan to open 25 new, full-sized stores and to remodel 35 others. American Fork is not on the list for 1994 expansion, and Butterfield said she was unsure whether the American Fork store will be remodeled in the future.

The community is responding quite well to everything, Butterfield said.

"Hopefully this will have a positive impact," she said.

Robert G. Miller, chairman of the board and chief executive officer, said, "Our investment in the five remodels this year and our intent to build new stores in the future are proof of our confidence in our Utah markets."

The $60 million investment will also double employment at the five stores. Fred Meyer's total employment will increase from 1,400 employees to 1,900 employees.

"Our expansion plans for Utah are a continuation of our efforts to open food operations in those few remaining markets where we previously had only non-food stores," Miller said.

Fred Meyer has been in the food business for 70 years, and Miller said they are committed to quality and value in the food business.

"Utah offers tremendous opportunity," Miller said. "It is one of the fastest growing states in the country, and this rapid growth is projected to continue."

"We are enthusiastic about our growth prospects in Utah."

Media wasting time on trial

When President Reagan was shot, the media gave the nation up-to-the-minute reports on his condition. When the space shuttle Columbia exploded, the media brought those tragic images into the homes of Americans for weeks. During the Persian Gulf War, the media, especially CNN, gave round-the-clock news of the events taking place in the Middle East.

The media is able to bring news to Americans every minute of any hour all day long, and now they have taken this power to bring us the Lorena Bobbitt trial. You can even catch the live proceedings on CNN.

Perhaps 24-hour coverage of the world is a bit too much for CNN, if they have to fill air time with such "breaking reports."

We ask the media to get some real news and leave the Bobbitt case to Hollywood, because even if you miss the trial, we're sure there will be a mini-series.

Family values a bit skewed

The United States, a country suddenly concerned with family values, has been cited by Amnesty International as a top abuser of children. Is this a case of institutionalizing what was once a paternal responsibility?

Perot, it's called free trade

Perhaps Ross Perot should visit the largest Walmart in the world or the new warehouse market fad, both in Mexico City. American discount shopping has caught the attention of Mexico's giant middle class. Let's hope it's there to stay.

America's Cold War victims

The Cold War was feared by the Eskimos of the northwest of Alaska as well as by the cancer patients in Cincinnati and the downwinders in Utah.

But they never feared the caribou they ate, the "treatments" they received or the air they breathed.

The enemy was within — like in the Trojan War.

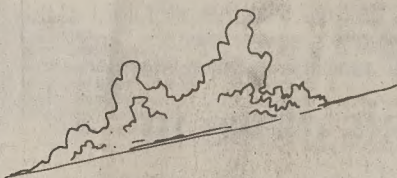

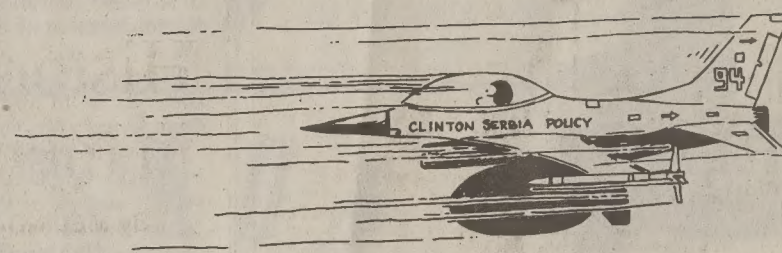

Gabor gives 'simple' answer

After Jane Fonda, Richard Simmons and Cindy Crawford, is it no surprise that the world of workout videos now presents to us Zsa Zsa Gabor? This week's edition of U.S. News & World Report reports that after Gabor and her husband lost a $3 million libel judgment last month, she developed a new half hour workout video called, "It's Simple, Darling."

A question dealing with the potential success of the video would refer to the type of experience Zsa Zsa has with working out as a whole, but as the nameplate describes, it's all very simple — just like keeping track of one's age, respecting Beverly Hills law officers and keeping the number of marriages in a lifetime below five.

If aerobics are as simple to Gabor as the above are, perhaps any predictions of the success of her new video had better be postponed until we get a definition of the word "simple" as Gabor sees it.

King's birthday brings questions of racism

With the approach of Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday, I find myself pondering the struggle of my forefathers and the freedoms I enjoy now as an Afro-American. I am grateful to Dr. King and others like him, both black and white (because there were also many whites who suffered, even lost their lives in the struggle), who made the freedoms I enjoy possible.

Although I do not suffer the physical pains nor the same civil injustices of racism my forefather had to bear, I do suffer the social and emotional pains and bare the scars of bigotry. Surprisingly, the greatest source of pain hasn't come from non-members, but from members of the Church. My experiences of the past year have prompted me to write this article.

I hope this will help breakdown barriers between races within the Church (particularly between blacks and whites). I hope these things will benefit those who are going through or will go through some of the things I went through last year.

I have come to realize that most members, even though they may not express it vocally, see me as inferior. They see me as not as worthy as they are. I received the most recent reminder of this a short time ago. A friend (who is white), who I have become increasingly close to, expressed her desire to start dating me to her parents. Their reaction didn't surprise me. I have heard the same thing before from the parents of other girls who I had gone out with. But this time it was especially painful because I knew her parents fairly well and had come up to their home often to visit. They are good people and I like being with them. After receiving disapproval from her mother, her father came with his scriptures in hand trying to convince her that if she dated me and ended up marrying me, she would forfeit her right to celestial glory and go "some other place." This really hurt coming from a person that I considered a brother in the gospel and a friend.

Another common idea I have often heard is the Lord cursed Cain with a black skin. This is false. It sure turned out to be a curse, but that was not the Lord's purpose in setting a mark on Cain. The real purpose was stated by Moses in Genesis 4:14-15. The Lord set a mark upon Cain as a protection to him and as a warning to those who might seek to kill him. Cain was cursed; he was cut off from the presence of the Lord and cut off from the fellowship of his brethren, a curse that will befall anyone (white or black) who disobeys the commandments.

On my mission I once had a companion who believed that blacks were less valiant in the pre-existence. This is not a common idea, but I have heard others who questioned whether this was true or not. Rex D. Pinegar answered this question at one of our mission conferences. He opened up the Book of Mormon to Alma. Alma teaches that all those who received the priesthood in the Melchizedek Priesthood, no matter their race, were called before the foun-

What puzzles me the most is how

SafeRide Responds

To the Editor:

In regards to Sariah Silver's letters about the SafeRide program, we are sorry for the inconvenience caused by the temporary discontinuance of the program. However, to continue this program we had to address issues of safety and liability.

In the past few weeks we have developed new SafeRide procedures. One of these procedures is that all users must enroll in the program. Sariah expressed concern for unenrolled students who, in emergency situations, might need rides home. We also share this concern. We are giving students a two week grace period (in which they do not have to be enrolled to ride), to Jan. 24, to enroll in the program. Additionally, stranded students who are unaware of the enrollment procedure will not be turned away from the vans, provided they live within the appropriate SafeRide boundaries and are able to present student I.D. cards. These students will be informed of the enrollment procedures and will not be able to ride again until they are enrolled. To promote safety, we must be careful who we let ride the SafeRide vans.

We are trying to make SafeRide as safe as possible. We hope in turn that students take responsibility for their safety by enrolling in the program as soon as possible. Students may enroll in 120 ELWC. There is a five dollar enrollment fee.

We would like to continue this program and we hope that those interested in its continuance will help by volunteering. To do so contact Jill Stratford at 377-8861, or visit the BYUSA office on the fourth floor of the Wilkinson Center.

Another solution

To the Editor:

The more articles I read about the new BYU housing policy to segregate students from non-students, the more appalled I get. The key word is segregate. Is BYU saying their students are so much better than non-students that non-students can't even share the same apartment building for fear of contaminating the BYU students' moral values? This seems to be the only way to interpret BYU's new policy. So non-students might, and I emphasize might, not live the exact standards that BYU has set up for their students. We, as BYU students, need to learn to live around those who aren't going to live the same standards and morals. Live and let live is a good way to look at this situation. If you wouldn't want someone to impose moral values on you, then don't impose moral values on someone else. If the United States imposed religious and moral choices on people, the Church might not exist today.

I offer a few suggestions. BYU could have landlords ask non-students if they would mind living the standards BYU has set for their students. If they say they will, then great. If they say they won't, then don't put them with students who only want to live with people that are going to abide by the BYU standards. Also, if students don't care if they live with someone who isn't going to live the exact standards of BYU, then let them. The student can still live the standards of BYU, but can be open-minded enough not to be bothered with non-students' choices of values.

Even though this might not be the perfect solution, the other policy is worse. It seems to me that BYU students should have a say on whom they live with.

Upcoming elections

To the Editor:

Qualified, experienced, and deserving: words like these appear on posters extolling the virtues of students running for BYUSA office this year. What do these adjectives really mean and how should they apply to the wide variety of students running in the elections? I'd like to add my own opinion to what could develop into an interesting and important debate, especially in the view of the recent changes to the election process.

What are the qualifications for the BYUSA President or SAC Chair. The new regulations simply state that all individuals applying must have some experience within the organization. This means that anyone who has volunteered in a leadership position with BYUSA for two semesters is "qualified" to run for president or SAC chair. But note, qualified to run and qualified to lead are two totally different concepts.

Don't get me wrong; the changes that have been made in creating open elections are an important step towards making BYUSA more responsible to the students it seeks to serve and represent. Students have long voiced their frustration with BYUSA and its election process by not voting, only 19-20 percent vote each year.

Why are students apathetic about voting? Because they either don't believe or don't realize that their student association does anything for them. Or maybe, in your specific case, it unfortunately really doesn't do anything for you.

Please understand, this is not a full organization. It does not exist simply to provide resume packing material for students with delusions of grandeur who hear themselves speak. Its mission is to meet the needs of the student body: to help solve their problems, provide them a voice, to develop and service opportunities and to provide social as well as educational activities.

To accomplish that mission, BYUSA is a rather large and relatively self-sufficient annual budget along with more than a thousand student volunteers who run its various programs. However, the critical factors that determine what BYUSA does and will do for the student body depends on the specific talents possessed by the men and women that run its office and develop its programs. Essentially, BYUSA is a business of considerable size and resources. It is the students' responsibility to elect a CEO with the talents to run the business, so choose wisely because the choice affects you.

Speaking of individual talents, it doesn't matter where those who run for these positions get their leadership training and experience. What matters is that they understand the students' concerns and are able to effectively represent BYUSA to effectively resolve those issues. For a leader to use resources effectively, they must know how the system works or they'll just spin their wheels. I'm not talking "insiders versus outsiders." I'm talking about electing a president who works with the administration and for the students. Only such a leader can make a difference for the students.

Currently, BYUSA is trying hard to turn to student issues and meet their needs. There remain many aspects that need changes in order for the organization to increase its accountability. For this reason, the question of qualification for the BYUSA and SAC should be, "Does the candidate understand the real concerns of the student body and is the campaign platform a realistic achievable plan for how to improve the current system? Or are they just talking smoke and playing the popularity game? Ask yourselves this when the debate begins and before you cast your ballot in February.

Dorms offer perks to upperclassmen

By HANS K. MEYER
Universe Staff Writer

Under to entice them to live in residence halls, BYU will offer specific incentives to upper-class students living next fall.

Don Oviatt, associate director of Housing Services, estimated that 80 percent of single, on-campus residents are freshmen. His office sent "quality" into the residence halls to find that would attract sophomores, juniors and seniors to on-campus living.

There's always a few vacancies each year and not a long waiting list everyone thinks," Oviatt said.

Oviatt said one of the most common complaints heard by upper-class students in the dorms was that they do not live with freshmen.

Ball, a resident of Helaman Hall from Raymond, Ala., said, "It's definitely a younger crowd (in the dorms) and not prime for RMs."

In response, BYU plans to designate specific buildings in all three single-dorm housing areas as upper-class only.

In Deseret Towers, R and S will be designated for upper-classmen. In Helaman Halls, John and Mary will serve the same purpose.

He feels the designated upper-class dorms will alleviate a lot of mischief," he said.

If I could choose, I'd like to live in an upper-class hall," said Marcia, a freshman living in Deseret Towers. "It's not easy to make a group with freshmen."

Oviatt also plans to provide upper-class students with a new meal plan, a $50 Signature Card account, and a combination refrigerator, freezer and microwave. Under the new meal plan, student accounts will be credited with a meal equivalency value that can be used at the Morris and Cannon Center cafeterias, the Cougarreat, ELWC Cafeteria, Skyroom, SFH Inside Track and Creamery.

"The best value will always be in the residence hall cafeteria," Oviatt said.

Shauna Silvers, a Deseret Towers freshman from Dallas, Ore., said that she was attracted to the on-campus housing because she didn't want to deal with cooking.

"More variety in the cafeteria would definitely be an incentive to staying in the dorms," she said.

Although excited by the incentives for returning sophomores, juniors and seniors, Camille Fairbanks, a freshman at Deseret Towers from Bellevue, Wash., said, "I'll probably get an apartment with my friends next semester. There's not many upper-classmen, so I won't return."

Oviatt said, "The word 'dorm' has always been one of my pet peeves because of the negative connotation it has."

"It seems it's a tradition to move out of the residence halls after one year, and it's a false one. The residence halls provide great opportunities for students."

In addition to upper-class halls and new meal options, BYU will also offer fixed rates and priority in transferring to family housing for returning sophomores, juniors and seniors.

Students learn publishing skills at campus journal

Universe Services

Reviewing, selecting and compiling student papers for a nationally-distributed scholarly journal is an educational experience — an experience open for anyone on campus who is interested.

The Journal of International and Area Studies compiles five to six student-written papers on international issues each fall and winter semester, distributing them on campus and to other universities each December and April.

The project not only gives students an opportunity to be published, but it also provides those who volunteer for the staff the chance to learn skills in desk-top publishing, source checking, English usage, and international affairs.

"The main thing I have enjoyed at the journal is reading articles on subjects I would have never approached," said Jeannie Evans, 23, a senior from San Marino, Calif., majoring in political science.

Staff members gather papers from classes that cover international topics, then involve faculty members to screen articles.

Submissions for publication should be taken to the Kennedy Center Publications office in 280 HRCB by Jan. 31.

Historians may find future in their study of the past

By MELINDA BALLARD
Universe Staff Writer

Students graduating in liberal arts majors can find new and enterprising ways to use their degrees with the help of the Career Resource Center located in the History Department.

"Students graduating in history don't know what to with their degree," said Thomas Percy, professor of history.

"The resource center is a small collection and has been pieced together with 25 of the best books in the U.S."

The books are an updated annotated index with information about what companies are hiring in the areas of retail, the service sector, the Central Intelligence Agency and the United Nations.

This information helps students make decisions about what they should study along with their history major.

Douglas F. Tobler, professor of history, said these books are specific. They give students actual names of people, places, and addresses to write and start making contacts, he said.

"The career resource center is part of a comprehensive mentoring program instituted to help history majors and those who want to be," he said.

The CRC is not a part of the advisement center. It is designed to take better care of the history majors, Tobler said.

When using the center, students can get to know a faculty member well enough to use them for future references and letters of recommendations.

History major, Norman Warren, is serving as chairman of the CRC. Under his direction, members of the History Honors Society, will voluntarily act as librarians at the CRC and will assist students.

Warren is beginning to use the center now to prepare him for his future.

"The center is an awesome opportunity for liberal arts majors to help them be more job conscious while going to school," he said.

The center will open next week. The hours will be Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 3-5 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday 10 a.m.-noon. Any changes in the hours will be posted at the center prior to the change.

Percy will speak about the center and its benefits for students Thursday, 7 p.m. in 357 ELWC.

Author tells students to eat more to lose weight

By JAY VERDOORN
Universe Staff Writer

Calorie counting is not the key to weight loss, said best-selling author Dana Thornock Rasmussen to an overflowing crowd of students at the Tanner Building Tuesday.

Tuesday's lecture marked the beginning of this semester's Marriott School of Management Entrepreneur Lecture Series.

Rasmussen, an expert in nutrition and exercise, told students how she dropped from a size 18 to a size 4 while eating 3,000 calories a day. The program, she explained, is possible for anybody willing to try.

Using information from her Lean and Free 2000 Plus Weight Control System, Rasmussen said long-lasting weight control involves proper eating, exercise, and attitude.

Weight control is more than just being concerned with the number of calories consumed. The average oriental woman consumes nearly 50 percent more calories daily than an American woman and is much less likely to be overweight, Rasmussen said.

"The body has an instinctive survival system that stores fat when people begin to diet," Rasmussen said.

It's more important to eat healthier than eat less. You can cause more damage than good when dieting and Rasmussen said her program allows you to eat more and still lose weight.

"It's an anti-diet," she said.

Exercise is also a key ingredient to weight control. Because of back problems, Rasmussen endorses low impact exercises that stimulate the body's metabolism.

The body's metabolism will begin to run faster and make it more difficult to gain weight, Rasmussen said.

"I can now eat as much as I want and not gain weight ... that is the kind of metabolism I have created," she said.

Attitude is the other key ingredient to weight control, Rasmussen said.

"Everything I teach is to get on with life and not to spend time dwelling on what others are doing," she said.

Praying is one way she keeps a positive attitude.

"Every morning you need to get on your knees and pray to your Heavenly Father to help you out ... and he will," Rasmussen said.

Y NOT: Cougar fans have license plates to show their school pride. However, Utes have bought more of the special collegiate plates.

Utes outdo Y fans on the interstate

SALT LAKE CITY — Judging from the number of special collegiate license plates on cars in the Beehive State, the University of Utah has the greatest number of die-hard fans.

The most defiant might be the handful of Ute supporters who live in the shadow of arch-rival BYU.

Jonathan Lindberg of Orem, for example, drives one of only seven vehicles with University of Utah plates registered in Utah County, according to a search of state Department of Motor Vehicle records.

"Mainly, I got the plate to see how upset I can make people around here," Lindberg said.

It's working. Since he got the plate in August, he's gotten plenty of reaction from BYU fans.

"I get some mean gestures. People even yell at me out of their car windows," Lindberg said. "I have friends who live on the BYU campus. When I drive down there, I really get some looks."

S. Korean professor spurs weapons debate

By KEVIN SCHLAG
Universe Staff Writer

Issues surrounding North Korea's nuclear weapons capability are being debated on campus following Friday's visit of a prominent South Korean professor.

Hakjoon Kim said during his Kennedy Center lecture, "The North Korean Nuclear Issue," that while the American media portrayed North Korea's consent to inspect its nuclear facilities as a concession, it is really a victory for the North Koreans because it establishes preliminary relations with the U.S.

Some Political Science 376 students said Tuesday that North Korea may need to be "opened up" to trade and a political relationship. Others questioned North Korea's motives and whether all their facilities would be open for full inspection.

Ongoing talks with North Korea will allow inspection of its nuclear facilities and strengthens unofficial relations with the United States.

However, this does not ensure that the United States will uncover everything about North Korea's nuclear program, according to a report in Sunday's Deseret News.

Agency officials will still be barred from conducting inspections of suspected sites not declared part of Pyongyang's atomic program, sources said. The officials are concerned because the shut down of the reactor is an opportunity to gain more weapon-grade nuclear fuel.

The agreement to talk to North Korea without South Korea's involvement is an important step toward establishing diplomatic relations between the two countries, said Michael Allen, BYU assistant professor of history.

"North Korea has been wanting one-on-one talks with the U.S. without the participation of South Korea," Allen said. The United States' agreement to talk solely with North Korea is a significant step in the development of diplomatic relations, he said.

President Clinton's involvement is beneficial to North Korea because it will add credibility to their status, Kim said.

Kim predicted the United States, while still unsure of North Korea's nuclear capabilities, will grant North Korea full diplomatic recognition.

"Professor Kim sees the conflict as an attempt by North Korea to stall on reunification talks with South Korea," Gardner Kelly, 25, a senior in Korean and international relations said.

Phi Kappa Phi Graduate Fellowships: Phi Kappa Phi graduate fellowships of $7,000 for the first year of graduate study in any field are available to members of Phi Kappa Phi. Applications can be picked up from Cheryl Brown (2054 JKHB, 378-2385) and need to be returned to Dr. Brown by Jan. 15. Fifty of the fellowships are awarded nationally each year. BYU nominees have been extremely successful over the past 15 years, winning fellowships 13 of those years and "honorable mention" stipends the other two years. Ballroom Dance Company in China during holidays

By SCARLETTE BUHRER
Universe Lifestyle Writer

Eight couples from BYU's Ballroom Dance Company began their holiday tour in China with a sponsored trip to Beijing. Mr. S.S. Tong invited the team to join him in Beijing for the China Dance Competition after he saw them perform on their summer tour.

Members of the team said ballroom dancing is fairly new to China, even though China considers it an Olympic sport. "I'm strong, a dancer myself, hopes to see the sport going," said Tim Rasmussen, a graduate student and member of the Ballroom Dance Company.

Elizabeth Rasmussen, a dancer and junior communication studies major from Fruit Heights, Utah, said Tong also brought over people from Italy, Russia and Germany.

One of the team performed a routine during the competition while others actually competed. "It was one of the best parts was representing the United States of America at the competition," Rasmussen said. "It made me proud to be an American."

Wendy Wakefield, the company director, assisted some of the team members in teaching a class one day in Beijing for the ballroom dance.

Costume Shop busy dressing BYU actors

By KRISTINA LOWE
Universe Lifestyle Writer

A staff of twelve, numerous volunteers and lots of hard work result in an array of costumes for more than 300 productions a year by BYU's film and theatre departments and special projects for the Young Ambassadors and Sundance Theatre.

BYU's Costume Shop makes costumes, dresses actors backstage, helps with makeup and takes care of costume maintenance like doing laundry and shining shoes, said Lisa Oliphant, a BYU student and five-year director of the costume shop.

The Costume Shop is now working on four projects including "The Most Happy Fella," which opens Friday.

The shop gives students hands-on theater experience, Oliphant said.

Mary Sabin, a senior majoring in fashion design from Kaysville, said working in the Costume Shop has "probably been my favorite job because I can apply what I learn in classes here."

Costumes are put together by pulling pieces from BYU's vast costume stockrooms or by creating new pieces.

Costumes must be practical to get into in a short period of time and easy to move in, said Carolyn Smith, the shop's only full-time stitcher.

"Costumes are a major part in creating a character but are a minor part in a whole production. We are part of the whole. We help transform a show," Oliphant said.

Working in the shop is fun but can be hectic, Smith said. "Right before a show opens sometimes it's a little hairy. It isn't a stressless job, but it's a fun one."

Often during a show an actor splits the seam of his pants. The dressers are trained to do fast seam repairs, said Oliphant. "The show must go on, and we do the best we can," Oliphant said.

"The people here are the best, but it's also really fun to have a good production and see it come off well," said Margo Seamons, a senior majoring in costume design from Preston, Idaho.

The Costume Shop is on a limited budget so volunteers are always welcome to help, Oliphant said.

Soaring allows sporter to reach new heights

By TAMI GIBBONS
Universe Staff Writer

Imagine yourself watching a hawk as it soars and climbs, circling lazily in the afternoon air, never flapping a wing, effortlessly gliding around in circles above you.

Now imagine yourself soaring with the bird, riding in perfect silence on a pocket of wind 11,000 feet above the ground in a sailplane.

Soaring is a sport that allows riders to experience just this feeling. A great length of glider cord is attached from a sailplane to an airplane. Then the sailplane and rider (and an instructor for beginners) are towed behind the airplane.

Once the desired height is reached, the airplane releases the rope and the sailplane is left to soar, climbing and circling around on waves of wind or thermals — rising columns of air.

Soaring is an activity that can be enjoyed not only in the summertime, but also in the winter months. In the winter there are not many hot thermals, but when winds blow in from the southwest over the mountain ridges passengers can ride those winds like water going up over a rock.

"You can climb way high in a thermal," said Dan Bates, a flight instructor at Heber City Airport. "The record is about 35-40,000 feet. We usually only go about 11,000 feet, though. But you can stay up there for as long as you want if conditions are right."

Bates said in the winter, sailplanes are usually towed up about 3,000 feet and then released to glide back down. He said that he often gives rides over to Park City, which requires a tow of up to about 11,000 feet. When the planes are released they glide back to Heber.

"People are usually apprehensive when I take them up for their first time, but then 90 percent of the time they absolutely love it and want to do it again," Bates said.

"It's the view, the quiet and just the feeling of being up there that makes people come back again and again. Most people really enjoy it more than they thought they would," he said.

Merrill Enniss, a student of Bates, said, "Soaring is something I wanted to do all my life. It is the greatest thing I've ever experienced as far as a high goes."

"It's very relaxing and the adrenaline flows. There's a sense of accomplishment when you achieve something you've never done before. You're alone with your elements and a calm just comes over you. I would recommend it to anyone."

Despite the cold weather, Bates said gloves and a coat are sufficient covering for those wishing to soar.

Most rides are about 30 minutes long. In addition to Heber City Airport, Soar Utah, also located in Heber, instructs and gives sailplane rides.

UNEXPECTED SURPRISE: To the delight of her parents, Rachelle and BYU offensive guard Tim Hanshaw, Alexis Hanshaw was born three weeks before her due date, in time to watch her dad play in the Thrifty Car Rental Holiday Bowl.

BYU's Holiday Bowl brings bundle of joy

By DAVID SCHREINDL
Universe Sports Writer

The Thrifty Car Rental Holiday Bowl at Jack Murphy Stadium in San Diego provided BYU's football program with hope for the future.

In addition, BYU offensive lineman Tim Hanshaw and his wife Rachelle shared more than the game as Christmas day brought them a baby girl, Alexis Marie Hanshaw.

The Hanshaws, expecting Alexis to arrive in January, drove down to San Diego with vacationing on their minds.

"We didn't expect her so soon, as we had planned to enjoy this vacation together, but we were excited to receive this early Christmas present," Rachelle said.

After talking with her doctor, who said Disneyland would not induce labor or endanger the baby, Rachelle travelled with a group of wives of BYU football players to spend Christmas Eve at the amusement park.

Alexis apparently had other plans however, as Hanshaw was rushed to Mercy Hospital in San Diego at 1:30 a.m. Christmas day.

After 7 hours of labor, Alexis Hanshaw arrived at 8:32 a.m. to the two proud parents.

Tim Hanshaw recalled how, after 6 hours of being with Rachelle in the hospital, he still had to practice the next day.

"Coach French was great about this. I was able to spend a couple days with my wife and child."

"Despite the excitement of Alexis' arrival, I was still able to focus on the game."

Hanshaw, a junior offensive guard for the Cougars, saw some playing time when replacing the injured Evan Pilgram late in the season.

Tim, however, did play the entire season on special teams as he lined up on kickoff returns, PATs, and field goals.

Alexis is the first child of the two BYU history majors. The Hanshaws were married June 19, 1992 in the Salt Lake Temple.

Former BYU pitcher finds minor leagues difficult transition from college game

By SHANE WILSON
Universe Sports Writer

The game finished at midnight. It was time to pack up the equipment, get on the bus and travel six hours to the next ballpark for a game that starts at 6 p.m.

This is the life of a minor-league baseball player.

In the minor leagues, the conditions are not very good and the pay is even worse. Just ask Darren Milne who made $1,400 a month last year playing for the Detroit Tiger's A and AA clubs.

"I laugh when people say that professional baseball is so glamorous," said Milne. "If they knew what it was really like they wouldn't want to trade positions with me."

Milne said his high school locker room was better than the one he dressed in last year and that the bus rides were longer than he took while playing at BYU.

"It was an eye-opening experience to me," said Milne. "I didn't realize how much I was pampered in college until I started playing in the minors."

Milne said that before he started playing in the minors he didn't realize that professional baseball is a business instead of a game.

"Guys who look like they don't even know how to play are string. You wonder how this guy is getting playing time. Then you realize the organization has a lot of money invested in him and would like to see a return on their money."

"I feel fortunate that the organization has invested money in me. It helps take some of the pressure to do well because I know that they will stick with me longer," said Milne.

Milne said it is so tough being "just another number" who is trying to make it to the majors and it is even tougher to get excited about playing a game every day.

"A lot of guys get burnt out because you play everyday. Guys start to pray for rain so they don't have to play. I feel fortunate that I still have the desire to play," said Milne.

What keeps Darren Milne's desire burning?

"Ever since I've been a little kid I have always wanted to play professional baseball. I used to watch Dale Murphy play and then pretend I was him."

Seeing all the major-leaguers at spring training also helps fuel my desire. I see the big leaguers driving expensive cars and wearing nice clothes and think that all of that could be mine someday."

Milne believes that he has the potential to achieve his dream.

He says that the only thing he needs to do is become more consistent.

"The only difference between myself and the major-leaguers is consistency. The major-leaguers play well everyday, while I play well streaks."

Milne is trying to prepare himself case he does not obtain his dream loses his desire.

He is currently finishing up degree in sports business at BYU. However, Milne would rather be playing professional baseball than have to get a "real job."

Wilson quickly adjusts to college game

By VALERIE BIRD
Universe Sports Writer

Wilson considered herself a coach for the BYU women's basketball team because she had college coaching experience. She was both shocked and thrilled when coming to BYU in 1989, she was coach at Hillcrest High in Salt Lake City for 12 years. She amassed a 231-79 record and led her teams to three 4A championships.

From a high school coach to college coach with no experience doesn't happen very often, she said.

Wilson said she finds coaching at the college level different from coaching high school because there are more responsibilities that go along with coaching in college like recruiting, traveling, budgeting and scheduling.

"My first concern when I became the coach was recruiting," she said. "I didn't know what I was doing or any of the ropes about recruiting, but I quickly learned them after my first year."

High school coaches make do with the talent they have, Wilson said. The programs are also more structured in high school.

However, recruiting the top athletes is how college programs are able to stay competitive every year, she said.

"Great athletes want to go where the program won't choke them," Wilson said. They want to showcase their own talents and creativity when given the chance because after college, women really can't go anywhere in basketball.

Wilson's coaching strategy is to have a full-court, pressing defense and have a creative, intricate offensive set where the players respond to the defensive commitments.

Coach Wilson is a passionate and enthusiastic coach, said assistant coach Glenna de Lisle. "She gives 110% at whatever she is doing with her job and it wears people out."

Her coaching style is a quick, fast, motion offense, said senior guard Nikki Eyre, who has had Wilson for a coach in high school and college.

She is a hard-nosed, defensive-minded coach, Eyre said.

"Glenna is my No. 1 assistant and is more like a co-coach because she is a big part of what we do and thinks like I do," Wilson said.

There is an atmosphere of freedom and progress with her as a coach, de Lisle said.

"Coach Wilson is a good teacher and makes sure the players understand what she wants them to do," said assistant coach Joel Christensen. She knows when the girls need to know they are doing a good job and knows when to give positive criticism.

"I have been a successful coach as a result of other people teaching me," Wilson said. "I never stop learning because the game is always changing."

By letting the players make their own choices on the floor, she creates good leaders and decision makers, de Lisle said. Everyone is like a big family and gets along well.

In her first two years as head coach, the Cougars have an 18-38 record. However, in 1991 the team registered the biggest turnaround in NCAA women's basketball going from 8-21 in 1990 to 21-8.

The Lady Cougars took second place in the WAC and earned the title of "Most Improved Team in the Nation" from the "NCAA News."

"Coach Wilson was the spark plug and flame the program needed," Eyre said. "She means everything to the program and has brought it out of its hole."

Men's volleyball team opens season Friday

By AMEE WALKER
Universe Sports Writer

Its fifth season of play, the men's volleyball team is expected to be one of the best in the country this year.

The team finished sixth nationally last year and will return four starters this year. Both "Volleyball Monthly" and "Volleyball Magazine" rank the team second behind defending national champion UCLA going into the 1994 season.

The team is going 2-26 in 1991 to being a contender for national championship. It is quite a tribute to our program, said Coach Carl McGown.

The team will begin their season with a two-day tournament at Santa Barbara. Among the teams

We want the National Championship. Second is nothing to us anymore."

-Ethan Watts

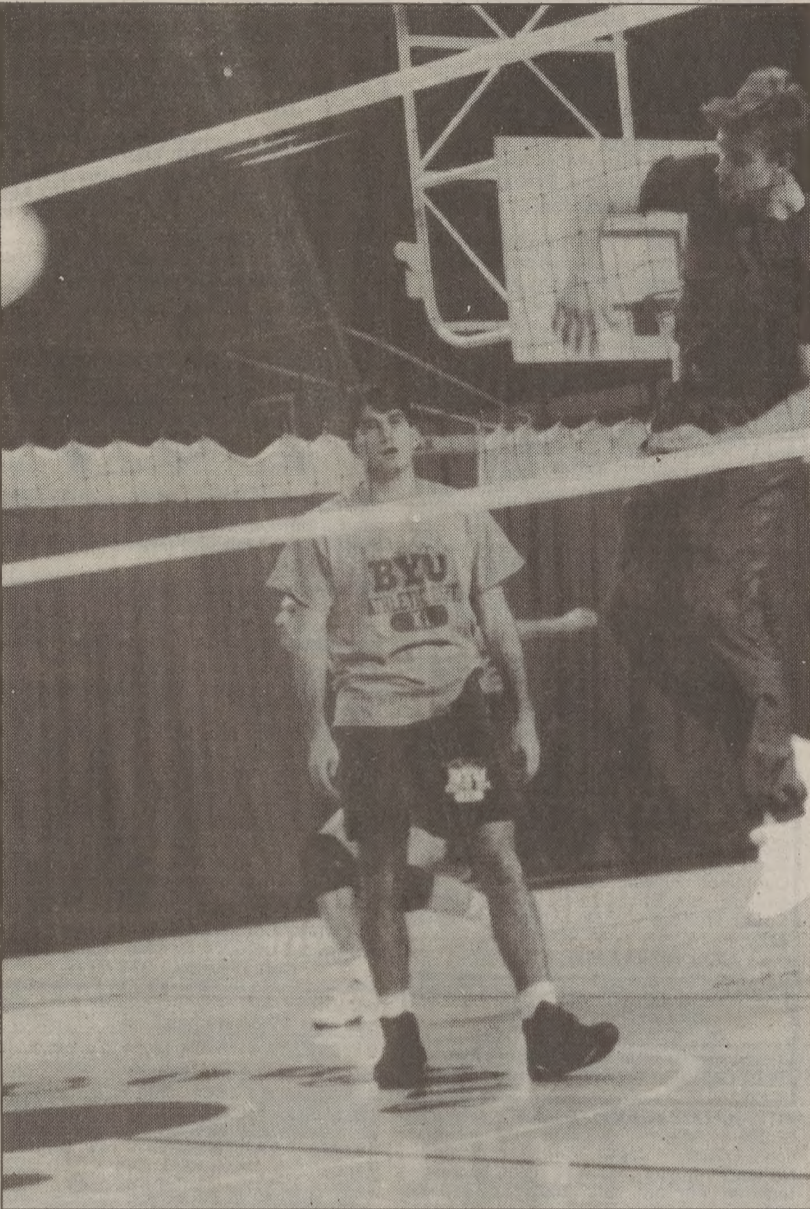

will be present are first-ranked Stanford, third-ranked USC and fifth-ranked Stanford.

There will be a test to see how good the players are. We will be disappointed if we don't win it," said middle blocker Kevin Hambly, a junior from Walnut Valley, Calif.

Watts said he views the tournament as a two-day season that will be a good pre-season test. BYU will play many of the tournament teams during regular season play.

Watts said the National Championship. Second is nothing to us anymore," said middle blocker Pat Sinclair, a senior outside hitter from Walnut Creek, Calif.

"Our program progress has been rapid due to a lot of support from the school and great coaching. This was a good recruiting year and we have experience too," Sinclair said.

Europeans fear new Russian expansionist threats

By AMY CRAGUN
Universe Staff Writer

Who thought a new Russia would be an easy ally to the West certainly did not count on the rise of an ultranationalist, Vladimir Zhirinovsky. Zhirinovsky and his Liberal Democratic Party won one-fourth of the vote in recent parliamentary elections. His success has alarmed Europe, especially what was once the Iron Curtain, an area extra sensitive to Russian expansion. Zhirinovsky's fears stem from reports of his suggestion that Russia reconquer its former empire. He is adamantly against proposals that NATO allow membership of new eastern European nations which would make Russian expansion difficult. The Associated Press reported that German lawmaker Friedbert Pflueger said, "Poland's angst over renewed imperialism in Russian policy must be taken seriously." Other threats include dumping nuclear waste at borders with the Baltic republics and fanning radiation into western Europe. The Washington Post reported last week that Zhirinovsky has threatened to destroy Germany in a third world war. At the same time, he said he would send 300,000 troops to Germany and demand a reaction from Bonn. Germany and Bulgaria have banned Zhirinovsky from their countries and Romania has denounced him. The German Foreign Ministry has stated that the Russian nationalist has "disqualified himself as a discussion partner" through these and earlier statements, according to a Washington Post report. Though President Clinton has not made a formal statement on Zhirinovsky or his policies, they will not be meeting during the president's trip to Russia. Despite all the noise, there is some question as to how dangerous Zhirinovsky and his party really are. A recent poll states that most Muscovites do not support Zhirinovsky or his ideas. Bruce Porter, professor of political science at BYU, said that some may have voted for Zhirinovsky in protest of Russian President Boris Yeltsin and his supporters. Others liked the militaristic and nationalistic approach. Zhirinovsky is also very good at campaigning, he said. Porter also explained Russian parliamentary elections. The parliament is split into an upper and lower house and voting for each is separate. In the lower house, or Duma, voting is split again into proportional and candidate elections. It was in the proportional elections that Zhirinovsky received 24 percent of the vote. He did considerably worse overall. Most of Zhirinovsky's supporters, said Porter, came from rural areas and the military. He was actually fourth in Moscow. However, in separate elections for the Pacific Fleet, part of the Russian navy, Zhirinovsky and his followers received 90 percent of the vote.

Radiation victims offered payments by government

By JERSHA BIGELOW
Universe Staff Writer

The Department of Energy researches controversial past experiments, Utah residents benefit from a Department of Energy program to compensate victims of radiation exposure. The effort to repay those affected by exposure to radiation, the Department has formed a compensation program. Part of the program, the department set up a hot line number for victims of radiation experimentation. Victims or their survivors can call a toll-free number to file a civil suit for compensation under the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act. The program provides compensation for victims of radiation exposure, including uranium mine site participants and "downwinders" or those who lived downwind of a nuclear test site. The compensation program is of great concern to Utah residents. Utah is considered a downwind state of the Nevada nuclear testing the compensation program, said Dr. Milton Lammering, a radiation specialist for the Environmental Protection Agency. "There were air releases from the Nevada test site which were trapped over Southern Utah," Lammering said. Residents who show they have been overexposed to radiation and have developed a disease as a result of the exposure can be compensated, Lammering said. But, he added, receiving compensation may not be easy. The Justice Department statistics report that of 3,547 claims, 1,553 claims have been approved and 1,470 denied, with 524 decisions pending. In addition to the Justice Department attempts to compensate victims, DOE efforts may bring a new wave of claims as more victims are discovered. The DOE is researching government files regarding radiation experimentation, and has set up its own hot line number in an attempt to learn more about the government's role in the controversial testing, especially during the 1950s. Anyone with information regarding radiation experimentation is encouraged to call the hot line number. According to one hot line operator, the DOE is taking names of callers as part of a formal report or survey in the event that the department can help victims in the future.

Group aids female leaders

By JENNIFER NIELSON
Universe Staff Writer

Women should be in politics because of the unique contributions they can make, not because of quotas or because men feel sorry for them, a state legislator said Tuesday. Christine Fox, who is also a BYU law student, has served three terms on the state legislature since her appointment to her late husband's seat in 1987. "We need more women in politics," Fox said. Addressing Women in Leadership, a Utah County group organized by Orem City Council Member Judy Bell, and Jan Lewis, Fox told the women what they could expect in public life. "It's going to be harder than you expect and more rewarding than you can imagine," Fox said. The organization, which began meeting six months ago, holds monthly meetings in an effort to "prepare women for elected and appointed offices." Fox discussed upcoming issues in this year's state legislature, addressing issues including the governor's health initiative, an overhaul of the Department of Family Services and term limitation. The governor's health initiative, Fox said, will be an attempt to get a pre-emption or a waiver from President Clinton's health care plan. Fox said that if the state can provide some kind of insurance co-op to provide low cost insurance to individuals who don't get it through their employers, Utah may qualify for exemption from the federal program, which she says almost certainly won't benefit Utah. The legislature will also consider changes in the Department of Family Services. "We need some very basic overhauls," Fox said. Overhauls might include changes in how social workers are trained. Fox argued against term limitations, which would limit terms to a total of six years. "The scary part about term limitation is that nobody's going to know what they're doing," she said. "A term limitation gives control of the budget to the bureaucracy." Women in Leadership meets the second Tuesday of each month at noon at the Manor House Restaurant, 1545 S. State, Orem. It is open to men and women.

"A term limitation gives control of the budget to the bureaucracy."

-- Christine Fox,
Utah state legislator including security risks and property damage, but both he and Duffin insist that BYU has never had significant problems in this area. "Other buildings put up thousands of dollars to cover damages, but we've never had to do that," Duffin said. Whatever the liabilities big concerts at universities can present, there is no doubt they can be very profitable for the band and the school.

alike. Bill Bass is a promoter with Feyline Productions. Feyline is a large concert promotion agency that operates out of Denver. He said that a university can expect to make at least $50,000 for a big concert. These revenues include money to be made from food and T-shirt sales. Duffin agreed that concerts can be very profitable for the Marriott Center, which runs independently from its own proceeds, without any university funding. "A good concert will pay for lots of volleyball games," he said. Bass explained that university venues are especially sought after by most bands, since they are meccas for large numbers of young people. These audiences are generally less likely to throw objects or cause accidents. Arizona State, the University of Colorado and the University of Nevada at Las Vegas are all popular venues for band tours in the West. "We are actively pursuing (big concerts) for BYU," Duffin said. "We keep in mind what students are interested in, and then look for what's available." Duffin named several performers he is currently pursuing for concerts in the near future. The list of possible acts includes Pink Floyd, Harry Connick Jr. and Sawyer Brown. Duffin said he welcomes any other suggestions from students and others who would attend concerts held at the Marriott Center.

Family center seeks volunteers for children

By KAMILLE THORNE
Universe Staff Writer

A local community center is holding a training meeting today at 3 p.m. for volunteers to help at a child-abuse prevention nursery.

The Family Support and Treatment Center is seeking volunteers to help care for children at the Child Abuse Prevention Crisis Nursery.

"Volunteers care for children that dwell in stressful household situations with the potential for abuse," said Marie Rushforth, program specialist for the center. "Parents are able to place the child in this safe environment for up to 72 hours."

The nursery provides one adult volunteer for every four children, ranging in age from infants to 11-year-olds, said Julie Bundrant, a receptionist at the center.

"The volunteers especially enjoy being a bright spot in a child's life," Rushforth said.

"The kids are fun to hang around with," said Mary Boone, a 17-year-old Orem resident. "The girls always come up to me and want their hair braided."

The nursery staff also has houseparents who live within the facilities and spend evenings with the children. "What really makes a difference is knowing that the kids can go from a stressful situation into a comfortable, healthy environment," said Tammy McDannell, a 23-year-old houseparent.

The success of the program relies upon the volunteers. "Without the volunteers, we would not be able to stay open," Rushforth said.

"I volunteered because I served a mission in Germany and developed a desire to work in the orphanages, but wasn't able to," said David DeBry, 21, a BYU student from Provo, majoring in natural sciences.

Volunteers will make a four-month commitment, working a flexible three-hour shift once a week. On-call status is available. For information, call 374-9080.

U.S. health leaders unite; push for end to smoking

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Health leaders and seven past surgeons general called on the government Tuesday to tax cigarettes $2 more a pack, ban smoking in public places, restrict tobacco ads and fully regulate cigarettes in an effort to make America smoke free by the year 2000.

"This nation remains in tobacco's death grip" three decades after first being told cigarettes cause cancer, Dr. Alfred Munzer, president of the American Lung Association, said as the group sought President Clinton's endorsement of their plans.

Health groups marked the 30th anniversary of the original surgeon general's report on tobacco by scolding Congress and presidents alike for their past lack of efforts to restrict a habit still blamed for 420,000 deaths a year.

Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders said 2 million lives have been saved since her predecessor, the late Dr. Luther Terry, first warned Americans on Jan. 11, 1964 that smoking caused cancer.

Two million people also have died of smoking-related lung cancers alone in that period. Back then, more than two in every five adults smoked. Today only one in four is a smoker.

Terry's crusade led to warning labels on cigarette packs. Cigarette ads were banished from the airwaves, airlines created no-smoking sections, and eventually smoking was banned on most domestic flights and in many offices.

Former Bush administration Surgeon General Antonia Novello said tobacco is still "the least regulated consumer product" in the United States and is marketed "with reckless abandon" toward the young by companies that need to replace both smokers who die and the one million who kick the habit each year.

Former President Jimmy Carter sent Clinton a letter urging him to stand up to tobacco interests and seek a $2 tax increase on each pack of cigarettes. Clinton has already proposed a 75-cent hike to pay for health reforms. Congress has to approve any change.

The seven past surgeons general said the country won't become smoke free by the year 2000 if the tobacco industry keeps its "strangle hold over the Congress and the administration."

They urged Clinton "to speak forcefully in favor of regulation of tobacco products," including tighter controls on advertising and bans on smoking in federal buildings and other public places. They also advocated full authority for the Food and Drug Administration to regulate cigarettes.

Thomas Lauria, spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, said tobacco is stringently regulated "from seedbed to sales counter." He claimed the critics really want prohibition of cigarettes.

The fact that smoking remains legal in every country "only indicates that there is a natural human market for this product," added Lauria, a non-smoker. "Some folks like smoking."

Elders, who will release the 24th surgeon general's report next month focusing on smoking and youth, said, "Any form of tobacco is lethal."
